

| Personal Information |  |                  |                                   |                  |
|----------------------|--|------------------|-----------------------------------|------------------|
| First Name           | Sharon   | Last Name        | Doty                              |                  |
| Organization         | University of Washington                         |                  |                                   |                  |
| Position             | Professor  | Nationality      | American                          |                  |
| Field of Expertise   | Plant microbiology                               |                  |                                   |                  |
| Title of             | Harnessing the power of the plant microbiome for |                  |                                   | NO NO            |
| Presentation         | environmental sustainability and protection      |                  |                                   |                  |
| Education            |  |                  |                                   |                  |
| 1985 - 1989          | B.S. Genetics                                    |                  | University of California, Davis   |                  |
| 1989 – 1995          | Ph.D. Microbiology                               |                  | University of Washington, Seattle |                  |
| 1995 – 2003          | Postdoc in Pla                                   | ant Biochemistry | University of Wash                | nington, Seattle |

Professional Experience

Professor, School of Environmental and Forest Sciences, College of the Environment, University of Washington, Sept. 16, 2016 (present position)
Adjunct Professor, Department of Microbiology, UW. Feb 1, 2017 (present position)
Associate Professor, SEFS, CoEnv, UW, 2009-2016
Assistant Professor, College of Forest Resources (CFR), UW, Sept. 15, 2006- Sept 14, 2009
Research Assistant Professor, CFR, UW, August 1, 2003- September 14, 2006

